7. New Business – Review Action Steps – At the last meeting, a lengthy discussion took place regarding what the next steps are for the WMA including presentations, Technical Team review, discussions with Ioway Creek WMA, funding for Watershed Coordinators, and results of the Dec. 7, 2022 planning meeting. Carmichael presented the plan to most of the member jurisdictions and shared what she learned from those meetings. Lammers attended all of the meetings in Hamilton County and shared the information that he gathered. Murken would like to have representatives or alternates of each jurisdiction attending the WMA meetings. Some of the members at the meeting will contact those jurisdictions about future attendance. Members discussed the Technical Team membership and will talk to some possible partner agencies about adding more participants. Currently, the Edge of Field program that Carmichael is leading, is reaching out to Story County land owners asking to survey their land for potential installation of saturated buffers and bio-reactors. IDALS would like to implement this same program in Hamilton County. Cox asked the group to review the Short-Term Action items (pages 185-190) in the plan and be prepared to discuss and make assignments at the next meeting. It was determined that we need to continue educating our members along with general community outreach and outreach among specific target areas. Murken would like to develop a focus group of champion farmers that could work with the WMA to promote conservation practices. Carmichael and Cox indicated that we should have a small group get with Story and Hamilton County's NRCS and SWCD to help the WMA find these local producers and farmers. Murken mentioned working with the Ioway Creek WMA and that she and some of those members and other county supervisors, spoke with our State Legislator, Representative Shannon Latham, regarding the funding needs for Watershed Coordinators. She was very interested in the efforts but was optimistic about funding this year. This will be a long, slow process to get accomplished.
